February 12th 2020: Is your Industry eating itself?

As someone committed to your career and your industry, you should worry if your company doesn't look like it's trying to bite its own tail, with investments into technology and taking business risks. If your company is not investing in eating itself fast enough, you can be sure that a tech or hyphen-tech company will have your company as a snack. Your company is not a safe haven. It will either eat itself, or be eaten by technology. Because the technology treadmill runs very fast, the new jobs are not safe from obsolescence. So as an individual with a few decades of work left inside you, you h

Gaurav Rastogi

Gaurav Rastogi is founder of future-of-work startup (doloopdigital.com), which he started after a long career in driving sales transformation at an $8Bn software services company. He is the author of two business books and working on a newsletter focused on "Personal Reinvention". He believes that the future is about continuous reinvention; that the future of work will have distributed workforces shared with other companies, as employees we will mix work-and-learning in quick cycles. "Computers" were once people too, he says, and believes that much of what we currently dislike about work- it's repetitiveness and lack of satisfaction- will be done by computers and AI. There's another side to
